EnvisionWare Announces New Brand and Expanded Line of Self-service Solutions

Atlanta, GA, June 16, 2017 – EnvisionWare, a leading provider of self-service and library efficiency solutions, announced today the company is gearing-up for the annual American Library Association (ALA) conference with a new brand, redesigned website, and expanded line of self-service solutions.

“So much has happened in libraries since we opened our doors almost two decades ago,” said CEO and Co-Founder Mike Monk. “During that time, our product line has evolved with new solutions to meet the self-service, 24/7 and mobile world we now live in. We’re excited to announce that we now have a fresh look, new solutions and a new website that is more reflective of the EnvisionWare of today.”

In addition to unveiling a new brand, EnvisionWare will showcase a new line of self-service hardware and software solutions at ALA (booth #2229). This includes a new software application for copy payment management. Copy Payment Manager provides patrons with the flexibility to choose how they pay for copies and centralizes financial reporting.

Attendees at ALA will also be introduced to an expanded line of EnvisionWare self-service kiosk and desktop hardware, along with a redesigned and enhanced user interface for self-checkout. The expanded hardware offerings provide libraries with multiple options based on décor, workflow and budget. The self-service stations integrate with EnvisionWare’s complete line of self-service software or libraries can continue to use their existing software.

“We’re committed to giving libraries high quality products that provide choice, flexibility and value,” said Monk. “Our expanded self-service line gives libraries a full range of options in terms of style, customization and pricing to best meet their needs.”
